

Like everyone is saying – this is a really important election.

For Gen-Z voters, it's even more so.

Why?

Because this is an election with huge consequences for the future of this country.

In fact, this election may go a long way toward shaping the world you live in for the rest of your adult life.

Let's start with the Supreme Court. When Donald Trump was president, he got to pick three justices for the court – and those three votes led directly to the end of Roe v. Wade, and the end of reproductive freedom for millions of women across the US.

Supreme Court justices serve for life. Those three justices Trump picked might still be on the court when you turn 50!

Now imagine if Trump gets another term.

There's a real chance he will get to name additional far-Right justices, and possibly even expand the Republican majority on the court – meaning that well into your middle-age years, the nation's highest court would be a barrier to progress on everything from personal freedoms to environmental protection.

And by the way – the environment is another area where Trump's return to the White House would shape your future in some pretty scary ways.

Donald Trump has called climate change a “hoax,” and actually pulled the US out of the most important international climate agreements.

Project 2025, which was written by many of Trump's most important advisers, calls for the dismantling of NOAA – the federal agency that supervises climate and weather assessments – and the end of free forecasts by the National Weather Service.

So, how does Donald Trump expect Americans to prepare for huge storms like the hurricane that just ripped through Florida, Georgia, and North Carolina? How does he expect us to address the future of climate change – and educate ourselves about the real risks?

The short answer: He doesn't. He'd rather leave our future – your future – completely to chance. He just doesn't care.

Speaking of education, here's yet another area where Donald Trump is looking to bankrupt the future – and leave the world you inherit in a much weaker place.

Education is the future – you know that. Many of you are working hard right now on your own education, or on saving up for your next degree or certification.

We wish Donald Trump took education as seriously. But, again, he just doesn't care.

What else could explain his team's Project 2025 plan to

- abolish the Department of Education;
- end Head Start and school-nutrition programs;
- reduce funding for plans that help students with disabilities;
- and increase the debt burden for thousands of students like you?

In this election, vote for your future. Make sure you register – and vote for Kamala Harris and Tim Walz.
